A: You can test the existence of an account just with the test/account database, which you can get via the AD module. Instead of hardcoding that you are trying to protect a file on your network you can just use a filename with a wildcard like c:/users/*/file.txt. Then check the output of test/account against that file name. Feb 3, 2011 Nitrogen, one of the basic building blocks of life, exists as four different forms in the atmosphere: dimethylnitrogen, or DMDN, dinitrogen monoxide, or DNOM, etc. DMDN, which constitutes only 5% of the total nitrogen on earth, changes into N2O with loss of 3% of its mass. This mixture of nitrogen and oxygen, known as dinitrogen monoxide (a form of nitric oxide [NO] that occurs naturally) is the main constituent of the Earth's atmosphere. It is a major greenhouse gas, and most of it is formed by oxidation of nitrous oxide, or N2O, by free radicals (that is, atoms with an unoccupied electron pair). Free radicals, which are created as a product of many processes, are the most common, and the most important, source of nitrogen oxides. N2O loss from the air is considered to have been underestimated in the past. Common processes that create free radicals include the splitting of water into oxygen and hydrogen by ultraviolet light and ionizing radiation (see: H2O(l)), the addition of solar energy to electron-hole pairs created in the first molecular vibration of nitrogen, in a nitrogen dioxide molecule (NO2), and in the complete oxidation of methane into carbon dioxide and water. About 25% of N2O is split from NO by light during the photochemical reactions that create tropospheric ozone. The NO itself is most important because it is the major source of NOx emissions to the atmosphere. The first step in the creation of N2O, NO, and NO2 is the oxidation of methane by oxygen. The nitrate of organic materials (N1O3) and nitrite of dissolved organic materials (NO2−) can also be oxidized by free radicals to NO2. The N2O split off 04aeff104c
